ENGLAND'S SMALLEST SCHOOL · FLYING HERO · GLASS PALACE BLOWN UP

Smallest School in England—This school in the Isle of Elmley, Kent, has only six scholars, here seen with their teacher. The school was built for 80, but a local factory closed, and the families moved away

His Life for a Village: Lieutenant Dunn, who died rather than damage an Indian village. See page 1

Glass Palace that was Blown up—This splendid greenhouse, built for the Dukes of Devonshire by Joseph Paxton, has been blown up as the cheapest way of dismantling it. It was too costly to maintain. See page 2

Champion Lady Runner—Miss Elaine Burton, aged 15, of Harrogate, the world's champion lady runner

Imps in the Park—These two jolly little children were snapped while they were having a rest on the railings after a strenuous game. There was no need to tell them to look pleasant

A Boy's Yacht on the Broads—Three boy readers of the C.N. enjoying a sail on the smooth water in the glorious June sunshine. They are all skilful navigators

A Full Load at the London Zoo—Camels are said to be very ill-tempered animals, but this old favourite at the London Zoo is always very docile and pleasant

Off to England!—The 500 Austrian children who have come to England for a long holiday are here seen leaving Vienna amid the cheers of their friends. See pages 3 and 7

How to Keep Cool on a Warm Day—These happy children find paddling in a London park almost as good fun as a visit to the seashore. They look forward eagerly to their half holidays
